Shuler elected AFL-CIO president, vows to dedicate membership to causes

Shuler, a labor leader long associated with the Teamsters, said Wednesday that he would take on the bold and unwieldy task of trying to reunite the federation in a term set to begin in July.

Phil Murdock, AFL-CIO President and Chief Executive Officer, said Thursday that the union leader's term in office at the labor federation has expired, elected to the union's national presidency by the delegate. "It's a new day, a new chapter in our movement, and a time for new leadership and new direction," Murdock said.

The Michigan Building and Construction Trades Council and its affiliated local unions have endorsed Shuler, the president of the Local 125 in the Detroit metro area, as the new president of the AFL-CIO.

Murdock said he supports Shuler's nomination by the Michigan Building and Construction Trades Council and AFL-CIO leader Liz Shuler. "We are excited to have her new leadership, and I believe that she can bring together the national leadership in the AFL-CIO," Murdock said.

Better safety for road workers

Road work can be dangerous work, but it doesn’t have to be. As the training director for Operating Engineers 324, I can tell you that the education we offer our 14,000 members operating heavy equipment is the foundation of the highest safety standards. Before that, I worked for 30 years in the field on road projects. I learned very quickly—safety tools are needed.

When I saw a project supervision in overseeing highway work, one of my first memorable memories of getting pulled late at night by the Michigan State Police, informing me that a drunk driver had crashed into a job site. I remember the knot in my stomach in the few moments before the officer on the other end of the line told me whether or not the worker that I had been working with had been successful in knowing no one was injured, and the anger that follows with the realization that the incident could have been much worse. Now, we are in the middle of unprecedented progress on the roads of Michigan. There has been bipartisan investment in repairing and replacing our crumbling infrastructure, and the need that exists around this summer as construction comes underway the necessary work. We are finally making the investment in our streets, our families, and our businesses, that good roads and bridges provide. Now we need to make a similar investment in our road workers, and ensure they are able to complete their work as safely as possible.

We are making progress. Recently, we saw the passage and signing of HB 3526, authorizing contractors to use one or more flashing lights with an illuminated changeable digital message and displaying the speed limit required for a work zone. This is a good first step and auto drivers who may not be aware of the speed required for a work zone. Unfortunately, we know that simply reminding drivers is not enough, we need to act. We recently supported two bills currently working their way through the Michigan Legislature. A worker on a highway project must be absolutely focused on the job they’re doing. These tasks require precision, and construction workers perform them while cars and trucks fly by them, inches away at high speeds. Signs posted at work zones any 45 mph zone. The speed limit is critical to protect our project workers and make work zones safe for everyone. Only the best practices are acceptable.

Safety is an essential part of the education we offer our members. Our instructors are the former work zone workers, and our instructors are the former work zone workers, and our instructors are the former work zone workers, and our instructors are the former work zone workers. We are sometimes the only daily contact for these workers during the long hours. These are some of the most demanding jobs we have, but we don’t accept the risk to everyone, even auto drivers who may not be aware of the speed required for a work zone. While we recognize the need for these measures, we also know that this is not the end of the road. We still have a long way to go.

Adding more safety measures, such as lighting and signage, will make a big difference in improving safety for our workers. We can make this happen in Michigan, and we’re making progress.

Building Michigan: Our unique bridge railings in history and making

Michael Mulcahy

One huge change occurred when the state Highway Department as Type R4 railings, usually referred to by the Michigan State Highway Foundation as Type R4, said a Historic Bridge Foundation article by Steve Raynor. The Type R4 railing was used in Michigan...
The environment in which unions operate today. There are approximate 15 million union members in the United States, and over 60 million people who benefit from union membership, including family members of union members. Labor unions have a proud history of fighting for workers’ rights and improving working conditions. Unions have played a vital role in advancing the rights of workers, particularly in traditionally low-wage industries and industries where workers are at risk of exploitation or harm on the job. Unions have also been instrumental in advancing civil rights and ensuring equal pay for equal work.

Union membership has been declining in recent years. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the percentage of union membership among wage and salary workers in the United States fell from 11.9% in 2011 to 10.5% in 2020. This decline is due to a variety of factors, including changes in the labor market, globalization, and shifts in public opinion towards unions.

Despite the decline in union membership, unions remain an important force in the workplace and in society. They continue to advocate for workers’ rights and to fight for fair wages, safe working conditions, and other forms of worker protection. Unions also play a role in shaping political discourse and policy by engaging in political action and lobbying for legislation that benefits workers.

The decline in union membership has also had implications for the political landscape. Unions have historically been a source of Democratic Party support, and their decline could contribute to a shift in political power. Unions have also been an important source of financial support for many Democratic candidates and election campaigns.

Despite these challenges, unions remain an essential part of the American labor movement and continue to work towards improving the lives of workers and their families. They are committed to fighting for a fair and just society where workers can live and work with dignity.

Trees and healthy forests not only help moderate the water temperature, but also help maintain healthy fish populations. For example, cisco are known warmer than their forested counterparts. When the water temperature rises, it can lead to excessive algae growth, which can be detrimental to the fish that live in the lake. The same conditions that help trees and other plants to grow are also favorable to fish and other aquatic organisms. Trees help to retain soils and reduce the amount of sediment in the water, which can lead to excessive algae growth and a reduction in water quality, cover fish spawning beds and damage aquatic vegetation.

Trees keep waters cool, and cooling beds and damage aquatic vegetation.

Trees also help to cool the water surface, which is especially important in the summer months. As the sun heats up the water, trees can help to keep the water cool, which is important for maintaining healthy fish populations. Trees help to keep the water cool by shading the water surface, which reduces the heat that is absorbed by the water. This can help to keep the water temperature in check, which is important for maintaining healthy fish populations.

Populations of cisco are an indicator species in lakes because they are closely tied to the temperature and quality of the water they live in. When water temperatures rise, cisco populations tend to decline, which can be an indicator of problems with water quality. Cisco populations are also used as an indicator of water quality in lakes and rivers, and they are often used to assess the health of a lake or river.

For those living on the lakes, rivers or streams in northern Michigan, it is important to maintain healthy forests and clean water to ensure healthy fish populations. This can be done by planting trees along the shoreline or in natural areas, and by maintaining healthy forests through proper land management and restoration. By doing so, we can help to maintain healthy populations of cisco and other important fish species in our lakes and rivers.
