Industry ends year on firm footing

Some eye-popping U.S. construction numbers are tempered with the ongoing realization that there are still a lot of settled industrial jobs. U.S. construction in November enjoyed a 3.9 jobless rate – tying a record-low rate for that month. Construction employment jumped nearly 27,700 in November, an increase of 20,000 of the 240,000, or 3.3 percent, from a year earlier. Moreover, the industry trimmed to times for hourly workers more than other sectors, according to an analysis of government data released Dec. 1.

The early years of development of the U.S. auto industry were a time of innovation and expansion. Thousands of companies that would design and assemble cars sprang up and then went out of business, or were merged into or out of existence. In 1908, it was becoming clear that a single auto maker was emerging from its pack of competitors. A great chance at a successful future beckoned to the makers. By 1917, it was becoming clear that this was going to be a massive presence in the world of auto manufacturing. The General Motors Building sprang up and then went out of existence.

By 1919, it was clear that General Motors was the 34th largest company in the nation. The General Motors headquarters building in Detroit, under construction in 1919, was the second largest office building in the world, in capacity. It began construction on the GM campus in 1919 for a large neoclassical structure 15 stories high and 220 feet long. The base of the building is two stories high and 400 feet wide. It was constructed in limestone. The building was added on in 1924. The New Center area, about three miles north of Downtown Detroit, was named after Durant but followed another nearly 208,000 square feet of floor space added to the plans. The GM board approved plans to add floor space. The two years that followed saw the construction of the first GM building. It was opened in 1923.

When the building opened in 1923, it was the tallest building in the world and the GM Building was considered a personal masterpiece in commercial architecture. The building was added to the National Register of Historic Places in 1978. The application said the scale of the enterprise was impressive: 15,000 tons of steel, four million cubic yards of dirt, and another nearly 208,000 square feet of floor space added. In addition, the building had 20 miles of electrical wiring, 100 miles of water pipes, tennis and handball courts, swimming pools. As the tallest building in the world, in capacity.

The scale of the building, even now, is impressive: 15,000 tons of steel, four million cubic yards of dirt, and another nearly 208,000 square feet of floor space added. The GM board approved plans to add floor space. The two years that followed saw the construction of the first GM building. It was opened in 1923.

You and your health...

There was a popular phrase from the 1950s and 60s that is occasionally heard “men don’t cry”. Until this occasion. After reading a book on the same name which was a tongue-in-cheek look at stereotypes about masculinity. The trend according to the images conjured by this book, was heavy on intensity and light on acknowledging, perhaps in others, or asking for help. It has been a long journey since then.

Disorder will still be true.

While there are plenty of “tough guy” manuals - hardcover, leather bound books, ripped action heroes who perform without emotion and all the building trades workers - many of the men in these fields today have an expressing feelings and emotions without distracting their status. Many of them know that they’ve become better family members, sons, and husbands because they’ve stopped locking away their feelings.

Men’s Health

Men’s Health Awareness Month takes place each May as a way to awareness of important health issues that affect men’s lives. The American Medical Association (AMA) recognizes May as Men’s Health Month to raise awareness of the unique health issues faced by men and to highlight the importance of preventative care. Men’s Health Month is an initiative of the National Council of1.

Men’s Health initiatives support a range of programs and activities that promote healthy lifestyles, men’s health and well-being.

One of the most significant health problems faced by men is prostate cancer.

Prostate cancer is the most common cancer in men and the second leading cause of cancer death in men. The risk of prostate cancer increases as a man gets older. Men who have close relatives with prostate cancer are at higher risk.
